Virginia Legislature.

Yesterday, the House of Delegates were engaged on the bill for suspending still further specie payments—The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole—Mr. Baker in the chair.

The bill, as proposed by the select committee, it will be recollected, is in the following words;

A bill, to suspend for a further time, the Act entitled an 'Act to provide more effectually for the payment of specie by the several banks of this commonwealth.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly that the Act, entitled 'An Act to provide more effectually for the payment of specie by the several banks of this commonwealth,' shall be further suspended until the 10th day of July next, and no longer.

Provided, That no Bank within this Commonwealth shall avail itself of the benefit of this Act, which shall not, on or before the 10th day of January next, have resumed the payment in specie of all notes under five dollars.

Mr. Hay offered the following amendment by way of substitute:

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia, That the operation of the act passed on the 25d day of Feb last, entitled "An Act to provide more effectually for the payment of specie by the several banks of this Commonwealth," and suspended by an Act of the present session until the 15th day of December next, be, and the same is hereby suspended, so long as the said banks shall refrain from declaring and making a dividend of the profits of the said banks, already accrued and undivided, or hereafter accruing, and no longer.

This Act shall commence, and be in force from and after the 14th day Dec. next,

Mr. Chamberlayne proposed to amend this Substitute, by striking out all after the second word ("suspended") in the first paragraph—and inserting in lieu of it, the following:

"Until the 20 of Febuary, 1817, if Congress shall adhere to its resolve on the subject of dues to the United States—but if it shall extend the time on that subject, then to the period so extended"

Messrs. Smyth, Anthony, and Robertson (of P.) spoke in favor of the original bill—Mr. Thweatt in favor of the substitute—and Mr. Scott against it. Mr. Robertson spoke against Mr. Chamberlayne's amendment to the substitute—Mr. Mercer of L. spoke in favor of the principle of it—though he preferred a modification of it, in point of form.

Finally, the amendment to the substitute was lost—and the committee rose, and had leave to sit again.

Shipwreck of the Meduse French Frigate.

From the Journal des Debats.

In our paper of the 11th, we gave an account of the fatal shipwreck of this vessel, almost within sight of Cape Blanco, on the African coast, which took place on the 2d July. This frigate was carrying out the French Governor of Senegal, and besides its complement of seamen, had a number of officers and soldiers on board. The following are some details respecting this lamentable as well as inexplicable affair, written by one of the actors and sufferers in this scene of unparralled horror. It will be proper to mention, that the recital commences at the moment when, the Meduse having been wrecked, it became necessary to divide the crew among the boats of the frigate, and a raft which was hastily constructed of its masts and yards.

(The writer, we suppose, leaves it to the captain and other marine officers, if alive, to explain how the shipwreck took place.)

"On the 5thof July, 1816, the embarkation of the crew and the soldiers in the boats and raft took place without order, & in the greatest confusion —There ought to have been 60 real seamen on the raft, and scarcely ten were put upon it. One hundred and forty-seven persons were confined to this frail machine. The precipitation with which it was built, prevented it from being fitted up with railings, because probably, those who caused it to be constructed, had no intention of committing themselves to it. The raft was about 60 feet long; if solidly put together, it would have been able to bear 200 men; but we had soon proofs of its weakness. It was without sails or masts there was placed upon it a number of quarter measures of flour, five barrels of wine, and two casks of water; but not a single biscuit.

"Scarcely had fifty men set foot on the raft, when it sunk at least two feet. To facilitate the embarkation of other soldiers on the raft, we were compelled to throw into the sea all the quarters of flour: the wine and water were alone preserved and the embarkation was continued until we found ourselves 147 in number. The raft had sunk at least three feet, and so closely were we bundled together, that it was impossible to move a single step. Fore and aft we had the water up to our middle. At the moment we left the frigate, about 20 lbs of biscuit were thrown to us, which fell into the sea, whence it was recovered with difficulty, and reduced almost to a paste; we prized it however in this state,

"It had been settled that all the boats of the frigate were to tow us, and the officers who commanded them had sworn that they would never abandon us. I am far from accusing these gentlemen of a breach of honour; a fatal chain of circumstances doubtless compelled them to renounce the generous plan which they had formed to save us or die with us. These circumstances merit an investigation.

"The boat in which was the Governor, threw to us the first towing rope. Shouts of Vive le Roi were a thousand times repeated by the people on the raft, and a small white flag was hoisted on the extremity of a musket barrel. The commandant appointed to the raft was a Midshipman of the first class, of the name of Coudin.

"If all the efforts of the boats had constantly acted upon us, favored as we were by the sea breezee, we should have reached land in less than three days for the frigate was not wrecked more than 12 or 15 leagues from the shore; such were the calculations of the officers, which turned out to be correct, because on the very day of departure, the boats got sight of land before sun-set. The first lieut. of the frigate, seeing that his efforts became useless, after having towed us alone for a few moments, cut the cable attached to the rafts, and left us to our fate. Several persons declared to me, that after this operation they heard the barbarous cry of "Let us abandon them." Had this fact from several persons.

"Indeed, we were not convinced that we were entirely abandoned, until the boats were almost entirely out of sight. Our consternation was then extreme as the horrors of famine and thirst were then depitched to our imaginations: and we had also to struggle with a treacherous element, which already covered one half of our bodies. All the soldiers and sailors gave themselves up to despair, and it was with great difficulty that we succeeded in calming them.

"We had embarked without having taken any nourishment; hunger began to make itself imperiously felt; a little biscuit, steeped in a little wine, formed our first repast, and it was the best we made during our abode on the raft. Some order was established for the distribution of our wretched pittance; by the first day, which passed in tolerable tranquility, the biscuit was exhausted. In the night our hearts and our prayers, by a sentiment natural to the unfortunate, turned towards Heaven—we invoked it with fervour, and derived from our prayers the advantage of hoping for deliverance.

"We still cherished the idea, that the division of boats would hasten to return to our assistance: night however came without fulfilling our hopes—the wind freshened, there was a considerable swell of the sea: what a frightful night!

"During this night a great number of our passengers, who had not a seaman's foot, tumbled over one another. In fine after ten hours of the most cruel sufferings, day arrived. What a spectacle presented itself to our view! Ten or twelve unfortunate creatures having their lower extremities entangled in the interstices left between the planks of the raft, had been unable to disengage themselves and had lost their lives. Several others had been carried off the raft by the violence of the sea; so that by morning we were already twenty fewer in number.

"We deplored the loss of our unfortunate companions, but we did not at the moment anticipate the scene that was to take place the next night. The hope of seeing the boats again in the course of the day, supported our courage; but when it was disappointed, depression followed and from that moment a seditious spirit manifested itself by cries of fury.

"Night came on; the sky was covered with thick clouds: the sea was still more terrible than on the preceding night, and the men being unable to hold fast to the raft, crowded towards the centre, the most solid part. Almost all those perished who were unable to reach the centre. The crowding of the people was such, that some were stifled by the weight of their comrades, who were falling upon them every moment.

"The soldiers and sailors giving themselves up for lost, fell a drinking, until they lost their reason. In this state they carried their delirium so far as to display the intention of murdering their chiefs and destroying the raft by cutting the ropes which united its different parts.—One of them advanced, armed with a hatchet, to execute this design; he had already begun to cut the ligaments, which was the signal of revolt. The officers came forward to restrain these madmen; the one who was armed with a hatchet, with which he dared to threaten them, was killed with the stroke of a sabre.

"Many of the officers and some passengers joined us for the preservation of the raft. The revolted drew their sabres and those who had none, armed themselves with knives. We put ourselves in a posture of defence, and the combat commenced. One of the rebels raised his weapon against an officer; he fell that moment pierced with wounds. This firmness appeared for a moment to intimidate the mutineers; but they closed in with one another, and retired aft to execute their plan. One of them feigning to repose himself, had begun to cut the ropes with a knife; when being informed of it by some domestic, we darted upon him; a soldier wished to defend him, threatened an officer with his knife, and aiming a blow at him, struck only his coat. The officer, turning about, floored his adversary, and threw him into the sea, as will as his comrade.

"The battle soon became general; the mast broke, and falling upon captain Dupont, who remained useless, nearly broke his thigh. He was seized by the soldiers, who threw him into the sea.—We perceived this, & were in time to save him; we placed him on a barrel, from whence he was torn by the mutineers, who wished to dig out his eyes with a knife. Roused by such ferocity, we charged them with fury, dashed through the lines which the soldiers had formed, sabre in hand, and many of them paid with their lives for their madness. The passengers seconded us. After a second charge, the fury of the rebels was subdued, and gave place to the most marked cowardice. The greater part threw themselves on their knees and asked pardon, which was granted.

"We thought order restorted, and returned to our post in the centre of the raft. It was nearly midnight, when our arms. After an hour of apparent tranquility, the soldiers rose anew; they were quite mad, but as they still enjoyed their physical strength, and were besides armed, it became necessary again to act on the defensive.

"They attacked us; we charged them in turn, and soon the raft was strewed with their carcases. Those of our adversaries who had no arms, endeavoured to tear us with teeth, many of us were cruelly bitten. I was so myself in the leg or shoulder. There were not more than twelve or fifteen of us to resist all these wretches, but our union formed our strength.

"Day at last broke on this scene of horror. A great number of those madmen had thrown themselves into the sea. In the morning, we found that 65 men had perished in the night, a fourth part of whom drowned themselves in despair.—We had lost only 2 of our party, and not a single officer.

"A new misfortune was disclosed to us at day break. The rebels, during the tumult, had broken into the sea two barrels of wine, and the only two casks of water which was upon the raft. There remained only one cask of wine: we were still sixty seven in all: it became necessary to put ourselves on half rations.—This was a new subject of murmur at the moment of distribution. Matters came to such a pitch, that it was necessary to resort to an extreme measure to support our wretched existence. I shudder with horror while I retrace that which we put in practice: I feel my pen drop from my hand: a mortal coldness freezes all my limbs, and my hair stands an end Great God! dare we still raise towards thee, our hands dyed with the blood of our fellow men? Thy clemency is infinite, and thy paternal goodness has already granted our repentance the pardon of the crime which was never voluntary, but that of the most awful necessity!

"Those whom death had spared in the disastrous night which I have just described, threw themselves ravenously on the dead bodies with which the raft was covered, cut them up in slices, which some even that instant devoured. A great number of us at first refused to touch the horrible food, but at last, yielding to a want still more pressing than that of humanity, we saw in this frightful repast the only deplorable means of prolonging existence: and I proposed, I acknowledge it, to dry these bleeding limbs, in order to make them a little more supportable to the taste. Some, however, had still courage enough to abstain from it, and to them a larger quantity of wine was granted.

"The following day passed without relief. Night came, and we took some moments of repose interrupted by the most cruel dreams. In fine, the 4th sun since our departure from the ship, rose to shine upon our woe, and to shew us ten or twelve of our companions stretched lifeless on the raft: we committed their bodies to the deep, reserving only one, destined to feed us.

"In the evening, about four o'clock, a happy event brought us some consolation. A shoal of flying fish got under our raft, and as there was an infinity of open spaces between the planks, the fish got in angled there in numbers. We pounced upon them, and made a considerable capture, taking about 200. Our first movement was to thank God for this unlooked for benefit. By means of some dried gun powder, a flint and steel, some tinder and rags, with the fragments of a cask, we procured some fire, on which we broiled the fish, and ate them with avidity, but we still joined to this some of that sacrilegous flesh which roasting rendered endurable, and which the officers and myself touched for the first time. The night was fine, and would have been esteemed by us fortunate, had it not been signalized by a new massacre. Some Spaniards, Italians and Negroes, who had remained neutral in the first revolt, or had come over to our side, formed a plot to throw us all into the sea. It was necessary to resume our arms, the difficulty was to ascertain the guilty, they were pointed out to us by some faithful seamen. The first signal of combat was given by a Spaniard, who, placed behind the mast, embraced it closely, made the sign of the cross, and invoked the name of God, brandishing at the same time his cutlass. The seamen seized their threw him into the sea, the mutineers to avenge their comrade, they were repulsed and order was restored.

"Day broke upon us for the sixth time the hour of repast I counted our people; we were only 30: we had lost of our faithful seamen. The survivors were in the most deplorable state: salt water had taken off the epidermis of our lower extremities; we were covered either with contusions or wounds which irritated by the salt water from us horrible cries; so that only 20 of us were able to keep on our feet and walk about—Nearly all our wounds, stores of fish were exhausted; wine left for only four days, and twelve fish remaining. In four days, we shall have consumed the last, and death will be inevitable. Four days have now passed since we were abandoned. We calculated that the boats were not swamped on the sea, they would require at least three days to reach St. Louis: it would require some time to dispatch which again would require some time to find us. We resolved to hold out as possible. In the course of the night soldiers crept behind the only wine left, they pierced it, and drinking with a pipe. We had agreed that the man who should resort to such means, should be punished with death. This law was executed on the spot, and the two culprits thrown into the sea. Thus there remained only 28 of the 30, of this number 15 alone appeared to exist four days longer all the others were covered with large wounds, had worn their reasons. However, they continued to share in our rations, and more than before their death, consumed two bottles of wine: these forty bottles of wine were to us of inestimable value. We had accounted the sick on half rations was to die by a few moments; to let them die without provisions was to put them to a slow death. After a long deliberation, we resolved to throw them into the sea, by whatever mode, however repugnant to our feelings, would procure to the survivors a few days, at the rate of three quarts of wine per day. The resolution taken, was how to execute it? The habit of seeing us ready to pounce upon us despair, the certainty of our infallible destruction by this fatal expedient, every thing in short had hardened our hearts, and rendered insensible to every other sentiment but that of self-preservation.

"Three seamen and a soldier undertook to themselves the cruel execution. We averted our eyes, and shed tears of blood over the fate of these unhappy victims. This sacrifice saved the 15 who remained: for when the brig Argus came to us, we had only one repast of wine left, and this was on the 5th day after the cruel event, which I have just described. The victims had not more than enough to live, and by keeping them for food, our subsistence would have been protracted days before our deliverance.

catastrophe we threw all the wine into the sea, they inspired us with such that we could not conquer. We had scarcely wherewith to spend the night on the raft, they were the most painful. Our minds were soured even by the want of sleep, our imagination dwelt on the mangled limbs of our unfortunate comrades, and we invoked death with our cries. A burning thirst, rendered more by the rays of a fiery sun, consumed us, was such that our parched throats drank with avidity the urine, which we had preserved to cool in small tin cups. We sought also to allay this burning sea water: but this only rendered thirst only for a moment, and rendered it more acute the next day. Three days passed in anguish and misery, we despised life to such a degree that several of us were resolved to bathe even in sight of the sharks which surrounded our raft. We were encouraged there remained in our casks only 10 or 15 bottles of wine: we began to experience an invincible disgust for the flesh which had fed us hitherto.

"On the 17th in the morning, Mr. Dupont, casting his eyes towards the horizon, perceived a ship, and announced it to us by a cry of joy: we perceived it to be a brig, but it was at a very great distance. we could only discover the top of its masts. The sight of which soon spread amongst us a joy which would be difficult to describe. We however, soon mixed with our joy, began to perceive that our vessel was in a very little elevation above the water, it was impossible to distinguish us at a distance. We did all we could to make ourselves observed: we put on board casks, at the top of which we fixed our handkerchiefs of different colors, and waved them incessantly. in spite of all these precautions the brig disappeared. From the excess of our joy, we passed to that of the most cruel grief, For my part, I envied the fate of those whom I had seen perish by my side. I then proposed to the unfortunate of our adventurers, to write their names at the foot of it, and to attach to the upper part of the mast a flag, that it might reach government and our families.

"Two hours after the Medusa had disappeared, the officer of the frigate uttered a loud cry of joy, was depicted in his countenance, his arms were stretched towards the horizon, he scarcely breathed, and all he could say was—"We are saved! we see a brig coming towards us!" We could not more than a third of the brig, having all sails spread, and

"Day broke upon us for the sixth time at the hour of repast I counted our people: we were only 30: we had lost five of our faithful seamen. "Two hours after the Master Gunner of the frigate uttered a loud cry; joy was depicted in his visage: his arms were stretched towards the sea: he scarcely breathed, and all he could say, was—"We are saved! yonder is the brig coming towards us!" It was in fact not more than a third of a league off, having all sails spread, and manoeuvring to pass quite close to us. Tears of joy flowed from our eyes. Every one laid hold of handkerchiefs or different pieces of linen in order to make signals to the brig, which was rapidly approaching. Our joy was at its height when we perceived at its mizen a large white flag—we exclaimed—"It is to Frenchmen then, we are to owe our deliverance!" The Argus had now come within two musket shots of us. The crew upon deck waving their hands and hats announced to us the pleasure they felt in bringing relief to their unfortunate countrymen. In a short time we all found ourselves on board the Argus.

"In closing this recital of the unheard of sufferings which we endured for 12 days, may be allowed to mention the names of those who shared them with myself. They were Messrs. Dupont, L'Heureux, Lozac, Clairet, officers of the troops Coraeal, engineer for Cape Verd; Griffon du Bellay, secretary of the Governor; Coudin, midshipman of the first class; Savigny, second surgeon of the frigate, and sergant-major; Courtad, master gunner; Lavilette, passenger for Cape verd; Coste, seaman; Thomas, pilot: Francois, inspector of infirmary: and Joan Charles soldier."

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 29.

Shipwreck of the Meduse French Frigate—Some weeks ago, we published a short account of this melancholy shipwreck. In a late London paper, we find a long and minute statement of the events which succeeded the wreck of the frigate. This statement which was drawn up by the surgeon of the vessel, (who was himself a witness to the awful scene he has described) we now present to our readers in the preceeding columns. Those who have seen the short skerch before published, will doubtless be gratified with the opportunity of reading the details here given, and others will find this narrative one of the most melancholy and interesting they have ever perused.

The Chevaliar Jose Correa de Serra had an audience of the President on Saturday last, when he delivered his letter of credence as Minister Plenipotentiary of his Most faithful Majesty the King of Portugal, Brazil and Algarves.

Daily National Intelligencer

By the Brig Virginia, Raeburn, which arrived here yesterday in sixteen days from Barbadoes, we learn, that a vessel had arrived there on the 6th from Laguira the Capt. of which had brought verbal intelligence, that the celebrated patriotic gen. Sir Gregor M'Gregor, had taken possession of Cumana, and was proceeding against Caracas with a sufficient force it was believed to take possession of that place. FED. GAZ

We learn from Captain Coran of the brig Peggy and Pamela from Gaudaloupe that the Governor of that Island has taken off the restriction on flour in American vessels, and that a Schooner from Alexandria had been permitted to land and sell her cargo of flour, at Bassatere, for which the Captain obtained $15 per barrel. The yellow fever was raging with great violence at Point Petre, and as many as 50 persons had been known to die in one day.

From the Utica Patriot,

Extract of a letter from Lieut Samuel L. Breese, on board the U. S. ship Washington, dated Naples, Aug. 20 1816, to his friend in Utica.

"We arrived here from Gibraltar the 13th ult. but were obliged to ride quarantine 13 days before we could communicate with the shore. I embraced the first opportunity that offered to visit the curiosities that abound in and about Naples. Mount Vesuvius is in full view before us, and emits constantly flames and smoke. The appearance at nights grand in the extreme. The objects that present themselves of primary importance to stranger's notice, are the remains of Pompie and Herculaneum, towns situated at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, and destroyed by its eruptions in the year 49. Several streets are cleared out from Pompie and disclose theatres, palaces, temples, &c. with whole rows of private buildings. The marble floorings and Mosaic work in the temples and palaces are superb—the paintings on the walls retain the brilliancy of their color notwithstanding the lapse of ages, though much disfigured and mutilated by the hands of workmen and visitors. Under one of the Villas is an extensive cellar, in which are thirty or forty large jars capable of containing three gallons each, in the same situation as when found, in which the owner of the mansion doubtless kept his Falernian wine; so much extolled by the Latin poet, Little did the owner of this mansion imagine, that after the lapse of nearly eighteen centuries, hundreds [from a part of the globe not then supposed to be in existence] quite as luxurious as himself, would traverse his favorite villa, examine his cellar and wine jugs, though mourning for its untimely fate, regret that some of his good Falernian had not escaped the ravages of the storm. So quickly effaced are the impressions wrought on us by scenes of awful calamity and desolation.

"The town is surrounded by a wall, outside of which are several monuments and cemetries in one of which we saw the ruins containing the illustrious dead, remaining as when found. The aqueduct that afforded water to the inhabitants is still in good order, and the water, of which I drank, was excellent pure and good.

"In Herculaneum, but one theatre only is dug out, as this place was destroyed by the lava, it is a work of immense labor to cut through it—whereas Pompei was destroyed by the ashes and cinders emitted by the volcano. Portei now stands on the site of Herculaneum; while in the theatre, we plainly heard the carriages rolling over our heads.

"We next visited the Tomb of Virgil, situated near the Grotto of Porsillipo, one mile from Naples. I never expected, while a schoolboy under the tuition of Mr. H.—— at W——, to trace the ground he made the scene of his story, and enter the tomb where once reposed the mortal remains of the Prince of Latin poets.

"The Grottos of Porsillipo and Delano are remarkable; the first from its extent, three fourths of a mile, and being cut entirely through the mountain; the latter for the noxious vapor exhaled from its bottom, fatal to every thing brought into it. We saw the experiment tried on a dog, which after remaining a few moments in this cave, became totally inanimate. A torch placed within a foot of the ground, is immediately extinguished.

"The castle St, Elino is an antique and strong work commanding the town. The Cathusian Monastery near it, the Catacombs and the Studii are worth attention and rank among the curiosities of Naples. The library of the studii contains, it is said, 300,000 volumes. The Picture Gallery contains some specimens of the best artist, particularly by Raphael, but as I am no connoisseur, I will not attempt to delineate their several merits. Baia, about twelve miles from Naples, I visited in company with other officers of the ship.—It is situated on a Bay of the same name, formed by the promontories of Porsillipo and Misenum. It is celebrated for having been the retreat of Roman Emperors and Statesmen, who, divesting themselves of the burden of public duties, retired hither, to enjoy amid its luxuries "otium cum dignitate." There are now to be seen the remains of several temples, Nero's hot and cold baths, his prison, a remarkable reservoir for the use of the Roman fleet, tomb of Agrippina, &c. We had from the promontory of Misenum a fine and near view of the river Styx and the Elysian fields, but no Charon answered to our repeated calls, and in vain we looked for his crazy boat.

"It was on this promontory Aeneas is said by Virgil to have first landed, in Italy, in search of the promised Latium. I visited the Lake Acernus, supposed to be the entrance, and through which Aeneas is said to have descended into the Infernal Regions. Near this is the Grotto of the sybil, whose residence was at Cumie, a town situated once about four miles from it, and then of great size and opulence, but now totally extinct; here she delivered here oracles, and her Aeneas demanded of her a knowledge of his destiny, and, by her command, visited the shades. I entered the Grotto, and was carried on the back of my guide for fifteen rods into her private bathing apartments. It is now a foot deep in water, and very dark and gloomy. A bout a mile from this is the Lucrine Lake, from which the luxurious Romans procured their famous oysters. At Puzzoli on the opposite side of the bay are the remains of a bridge erected by Caligula, connecting Bia and Puzzoli; ten piers remain entire. At Puzzoli are the ruins of an amphitheatre, and several temples particularly one to Jupiter Serapis"

Departed this life, on Tuesday evening the 26th instant, after a lingering and painful illness, which she bore with patience and resignation, Mrs Lucy Armistead, relict of the late John Armistead, Esq. of Caroline county, Virginia, in the 71st year of her age.

JAMES KENNEDY & SON,
BOOKSELLERS, KING STREET,
Have just received from LEE'S PATENT MEDICINE Store, No. 46 Maiden Lane, N. York.
A FRESH SUPPLY
Of the following genuine Medicines.
For the prevention and cure of Bilious and Malignant Fevers, is recommended

Hahn's Anti-Bilious Pills
THIS Medicine has been attended with a degree of success highly grateful to the inventor's feelings, in several parts of the West Indies, and the Southern & Middle States, particularly in N. York Philadelphia, Baltimore, Petersburg Richmond, Norfolk, Edenton, Wilmington, Charleston, and Savannah. The testimony of a number of persons at each of the above places can be adduced, who have reason to believe, that a timely use of this salutary remedy has, under Providence, preserved their lives, when in the most alarming circumstances.

Facts of this conclusive nature speak more in favour of a medicine than columns of pompous eulogy, founded on mere assertion.

It is not, indeed, presumptuously proposed as an infallible cure, but the inventor has every possible reason that can result from extensive experience, for believing that a dose of these Pills, taken once in every two weeks, during the prevalence of our bilious fevers, will prove an infallible preventative; and further, that in the earlier stages of those diseases, their use will very generally succeed in restoring health, and frequently in cases esteemed desperate, and beyond the power of common remedies.

The operation of these pills is perfectly mild, so as to be used with safety by persons in every situation, and of every age.

They are excellently adapted to carry off superfluous bile & prevent its morbid secretions—to restore & amend the appetite—to produce a free perspiration and thereby prevent colds which is so often of fatal consequences. A dose never fails to remove a cold if taken on its first appearance—they are celebrated for removing habitual costiveness—sickness at the stomach and severe head-ache—and ought to be taken by all persons on a change of climate.

They have been found remarkably efficatious in preventing and curing disorders attendant on long voyages, and should be procured and carefully preserved for use by every seaman.

HAMILTON'S WORM DESTROYING LOZENGES.
Which have cured an immense number of persons of both sexes, of every age, and in every situation, of various dangerous complaints arising from worms, and from obstructions or foulness in their stomach and bowels.

This medicine bears no analogy whatever to others of similar titles so commonly complained of, as operating with violence; on the contrary, a particular excellence of this remedy is its being suited to every age and constitution. It contains nothing but what is perfectly innocent, and is also mild in its operation, cannot injure the most delicate pregnant lady or the tenderest infant of a week old, should no worms exist in the body; but will, without pain or griping, cleanse the stomach and bowels, of whatever is foul or offensive, and thereby prevent the production of worms, and many fatal disorders. The lozenges are particularly efficacious in carrying off all gross humours and eruptions, feverish and bilious complaints, and are the safest and mildest purgative that can be used on any occasion.

DESCRIPTION OF WORMS.
And the symptoms by which they are known:

Worms which infest the human body are chiefly of four kinds, viz.—The Teres, or large round worm; the Ascarides, or small maw-worm; the Cucurbitina, or short, flat, white worm; and lastly, the Tænia, or tape-worm, so called from its resemblance to tape. This is often many yards long, and is full of joints. It is most hurtful and most difficult to remove.

Among the symptoms attending worms are—disagreeable breath, especially in the morning; bad and corrupted gums; itching in the nose, and about the seat; convulsions, epileptic fits, and sometime privation of speech; starting and grinding of the teeth in sleep; irregular appetite, sometimes loathing food, and sometimes voracious; purging, with slimy & fœtid stools; vomiting; large and hard belly; pains and sickness at the stomach; slow fever, with small and irregular pulse; a dry cough; excessive thirst; sometimes pale and unhealthy countenance, and sometimes the face bloated and flushed.

Persons afflicted with any of the above symptoms, should have immediate recourse to Hamilton's Worm Destroying Lozenges, which have been constantly attended with success, in all complaints similar to those above described.

A dose of this medicine given occasionally during the warm season, will effectually prevent "the vomiting and purging of children"—a dreadful disorder, which annually destroys thousands of the infant part of our citizens. It is likewise the mildest and most certain remedy known, and has restored to health and strength a great number when in an advanced stage of this fatal complaint. Particular and plain instructions are given for every part of the necessary treatment in such cases.

Children generally take this medicine with eagerness; having a pleasing appearance, and an agreeable taste.

Hamilton's Essence and Extract of Mustard.
A safe and effectual remedy for acute and chronic rheumatism, gout asthmatic gout, palsy, lumbagoo, numbness, white swellings, chilblains, sprains, bruises, pain in the face and neck, etc.

The Genuine Persian Lotion.
So celebrated among the fashionable throughout Europe, is an invaluable cosmetic, perfectly innocent and safe, free from corrosive and repellant minerals, (the basis of other lotions) and of unparralled efficacy in removing blemishes of the face and skin, freckles, pimples, inflamatory redness, scurfs, tetters, ringworms, sunburns, prickly heat, &c. The Persian Lotion operates mildly, without impeding the natural, insensible perspiration, which is essential to health, yet its effects are speedy and permanent, rendering the skin delicately soft and smooth and improving the complexion.

The Restorative Powder for the teeth and Gums.
This excellent preparation comforts and strengthens the gums, preserves the enamel from decay, and cleanses and whitens the teeth, by absorbing all the acrimonious slime and foulness, which suffered to accumulate, never fails to injure and finally ruin them.

Hamilton's Grand Restorative.
Is recommended as an invaluable medicine for the speedy relief and permanent cure of the various complaints resulting from dissipated pleasures, juvenile indiscretions, residence in climates unfavourable to the constitution, the immoderate use of tea, frequent inoxication or any other destructive intemperance the unskilful or excessive use of mercury, the diseases peculiar to females at a certain period of life, bad lyings in, &c.

HAMILTON'S ELIXIR.
Sovereign remedy for Colds, obstinate Coughs, Asthmas, sore throats, and approaching Consumptions, and most disorders of the breast and lungs.

Hahn's genuine Eye Water.
A sovereign remedy for all diseases of the eyes, whether the effect of natural weakness or of accident.

Toothe Ache Drops.
The only remedy yet discovered which gives immediate and lasting relief in the most severe instances.

Lee's Ointment for the Itch.
Warranted an infallible remedy at one application, may be used with perfect safety on infants a week old, not containing a particle of mercury or any dangerous ingredient whatever, and not accompanied with that tormenting smart which attends the application of other remedies.

Lee's Infallibe Ague and Fever Drops.
For the cure of agues, remittent, and intermittent fevers.

Han's true & genuine German Corn Plaister.
☞ At the place of sale pamphlets may be had gratis, describing cures performed by the above medicines; the number, importance and respectability of which, fully justify every article of this advertisement.
